Q+A WITH OUR KEYNOTE SPEAKERS, DEANNA A. THOMPSON & JEFFREY H. MAHAN

Can the theological world be a leader in a digital landscape?

[DT] "I'd love to see theologians and churches be leaders in having more nuanced conversations about when and how digital technology should be used alongside conversations about what it means to be our best selves when we're online and gathering virtually. The conversation needs to move beyond "virtual gatherings are second best."

[JM] "In a world that is complexly inter-religious and secular, theological and religious leaders are called to help their specific faith communities reimagine themselves for effective ministry. They also enter a wider conversation about the nature of the human and our understandings of justice in the face of new digital understanding of the self and of community."
